As a prospective law student about to start her studies, she was understandably delighted to meet her personal hero, the late Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia. Not only was she most intrigued by his intellect, but also his history as an athlete. His legal career began as an assistant coach at Ohio State University, and when he was appointed to the Supreme Court in 1986, he boasted a two-time Olympic bronze medal in the 100-meter run. He went on to play Major League baseball for the Cleveland Indians and the Texas Rangers. Now, just four days after Scalia passed away, a Brazilian woman who met him at a recent Supreme Court opening ceremony will have the opportunity to be introduced to Scalia's intellect when she's back in her homeland. Ana Maria Tatcher, 25, lives in Curitiba, Brazil and attended the ceremony earlier this month. After the death of her parents who lived in Texas, she moved to a new home in the city. Through an acquaintance of her father's, she was invited to attend the Supreme Court ceremony and afterward, she met Scalia. When we asked Tatcher what he talked about, she said, "I got to see the inside of the court for the first time, the inside of the courtroom, and everything. I got to see a lot of great things. I got to see the people that work in the Supreme Court. He gave me a tour. He told me a lot of things I didn't know about the Supreme Court. "Because I am a lawyer, he got me excited about what the court is and about the people who work there," she explained. In terms of what Scalia discussed with her, Tatcher said, "I can't remember everything. But he explained to me how the court works, and how the judges work. He explained to me who each one of the judges were. He tried to give me the history of the Supreme Court." He also invited her to watch a Supreme Court video of the latest oral arguments, which Scalia said that "the government is trying to deny the First Amendment rights of free speech and free press, which is very dangerous." Afterwards, Tatcher said that his speech "taught me a lot and that makes me excited to be a lawyer in the future." In addition to expressing an interest in becoming a lawyer, Tatcher is
