. [5] "The record also shows that defendant was lawfully sentenced to the minimum term of two years. That was an authorized sentence under the Penal Code (§§ 3020, 3024) and under the ordinance. It was not a punishment or deterrent." (P. 616.) Section 3020 of the Penal Code provides in part: "When any person is convicted of any offense, except manslaughter, assault with intent to commit murder, assault with intent to commit rape, or assault with intent to commit robbery, under the provisions of this chapter it shall be the duty of the court to pronounce the judgment of conviction; and the court shall make such order in respect to the imprisonment and custody of such person as shall be just and proper under the circumstances of the particular case, and as such order may be appealed from, in the same manner and with like effect as any final judgment." Section 3024 of that code provides: "The punishment for a misdemeanor is a fine of not exceeding one thousand dollars ($1,000) or by imprisonment in a county jail not exceeding one year or by both such fine and imprisonment. When any person is convicted of any offense, except manslaughter, assault with intent to commit murder, assault with intent to commit rape, or assault with intent to commit robbery, under the provisions of this chapter it shall be the duty of the court to pronounce the judgment of conviction; and the court shall determine the amount of the fine, and the places of imprisonment, to be as follows: for a misdemeanor, not a habitual, the fine to be not more than one thousand dollars ($1,000) or imprisonment for not more than one year in the county jail, or both; or where an order was made by the court as provided in Section 3020, the fine to be not more than five hundred dollars ($500) or imprisonment for not more than one year in the county jail, or both." "In case of a misdemeanor, that is, for a 'misdemeanor, not a habitual,' the fine is thus limited, i. e., one thousand dollars (not more than), or one year in the county jail or both; and the power to imprison is as here stated, 'or', not 'as follows,' which leaves no room for the punitive idea of imprisonment." Evaluation of soyobanoids, a group of biological products, for the prevention of surgical site infections. Surgically contaminated wounds create a risk of infection due to colonization of the surgical site with environmental bacterial species. To reduce or eliminate this risk of infection, we evaluated Surgisome (R) wound spray, an active agent device that may be applied to the wound after surgery, for its efficacy in reducing post-operative infection after surgery involving a contaminated wound. To prepare a clinical trial site, a University veterinary hospital was selected and the hospital personnel participated in the study. After acquiring institutional approval, informed consent was obtained from each volunteer. Prospective or retrospective clinical trials were established using volunteer dogs undergoing castration, ovariectomy, or exploratory abdominal surgery. A 2-second spray of Surgisome (R) was applied to the surgical wound. The wound was surgically prepared and closed. The patient was monitored for 30 days post-surgery. Six dogs were enrolled in the study. Four dogs were treated with surgical site preparation and closure using the Surgisome (R) spray and two dogs were treated without any intervention. Subcutaneous abscesses, granulation, and crust formation were observed between the 30th and 60th post-operative days. All of the abscesses were located on the side of the treated surgical wound. This study indicated that Surgisome (R) is an effective agent for prevention of surgical site infection. Additional studies are recommended to evaluate the efficacy of Surgisome (R) in other types of surgery, wound closure technique, and other wound healing conditions. With the advent of the Internet, electronic commerce has become increasingly popular. One form of e-commerce that is growing in popularity is automated clearinghouse ("ACH") transactions. Automated clearinghouse transactions are basically simplified bank transfers. ACH transactions generally involve electronic transfer of information to an account from which a transfer can be initiated. More particularly, an electronic clearinghouse transaction, also known as an Automated Clearing House Transaction, may involve the transfer of funds from one account to another account using information provided in a stored file, such as an Automated Clearinghouse file or an Automated Clearinghouse Transaction ("ACH") file. In particular, the file may provide a sequence number of the payment, and other identification information, as well as a controlling account number, whereby an individual can initiate a transfer from one account to another account.
